

NHS North West Transparency Project

Reduction of Pressure Ulcers and Falls - How have we been doing? Patient and Staff Experience- What have they been saying?

We are one of a number of NHS organisations who want to be open and transparent with our patients. This is how a modern NHS hospital should be – open and accountable, to the public and patients, driving improvements in care. As a member of the ‘Transparency Project’ we continue to work with patients and staff to further reduce the harm that patients sometimes experience when they are in our care, and we have made a commitment to publish a set of patient outcomes, patient experience and staff experience measures. Each month we collaborate with other care providers to share what we have learned, and to use this to identify where changes to improve care can be made.

This is the ninth month that the Trust has published data on pressure ulcers, falls and results of patient and staff experience surveys. We are continuing to work on the areas we identified as improvement work last month.

Patient experience is a vital source of information that we can use to help improve the care to our patients. To build on this we carry out a monthly patient experience audit called the ‘100 voices’. Through this we seek to talk to as many patients as possible about their experience of care. We encourage office based staff to support this initiative by giving an hour a month, to take part in the patient experience initiative. This provides us with very powerful feedback, allowing us to take forward any improvement actions.

In October we cared for 7328 patients	4 patients suffered a fall 1 resulting in moderate harm and 3 severe harm in our care	4 patients suffered a pressure ulcer in our care – 3 x category 2 and 1 x category 3
--	--	---

In October there were unfortunately four patients who sustained a pressure ulcer and four patients who sustained harm as a result of a fall. Work is underway to understand how the harms occurred in October and if anything more could have been done to prevent them. The learning from these investigations will be shared in next month’s report.

Following our review of the patients who sustained a fall in September, it is pleasing to note that all preventative measures were in place for most patients. However for one patient not all measures were in place. From the review of this patient, a risk assessment had not been completed. The changes to be implemented have been shared with the team.

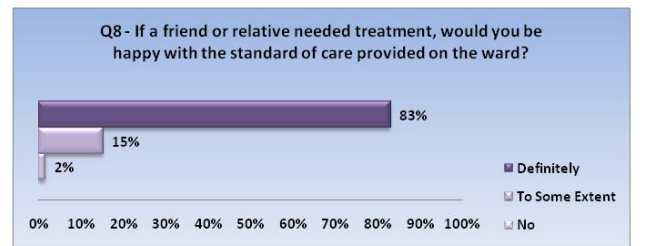

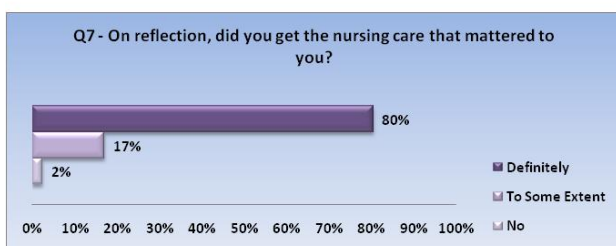

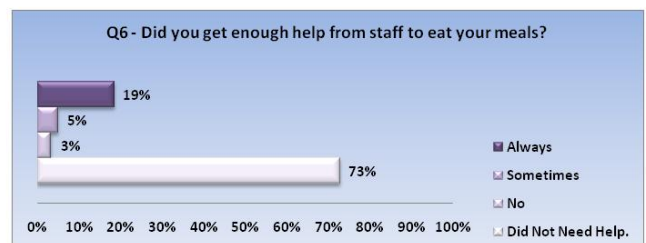

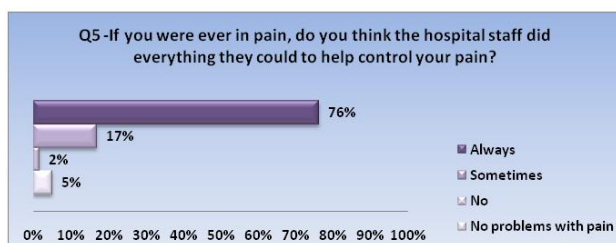

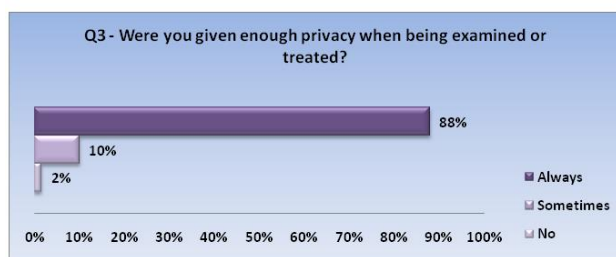

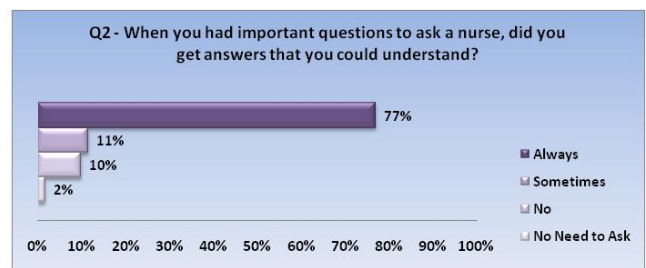

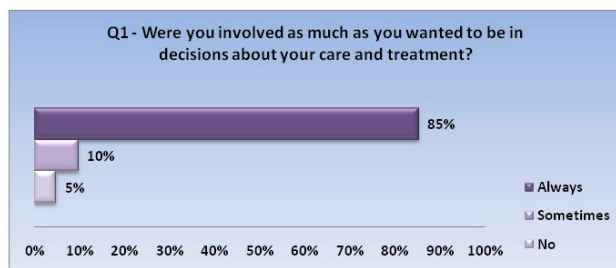

From the review of the patients who sustained a pressure ulcer in September, unfortunately for one of the patients all measures were not put in place in a timely manner which contributed to the deterioration of the pressure ulcer. The lessons learned and recommendations have been shared with the ward team to ensure continuous improvement.

In the areas where harms occurred this is what patients said:

October's data overall shows an increase in patient satisfaction in three of the domains and a very slight decrease in three of the domains. Overall, patients are satisfied with the care they received.

These are important to us and we continually measure these very important aspects of patient satisfaction as part of our monthly patient '100 voices' survey.

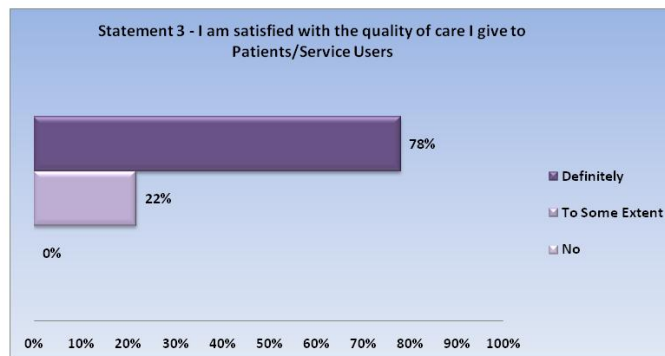

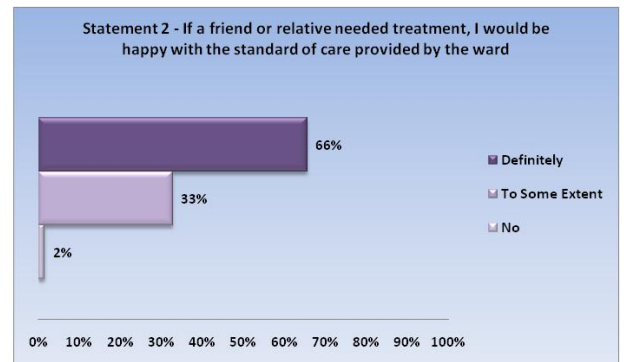

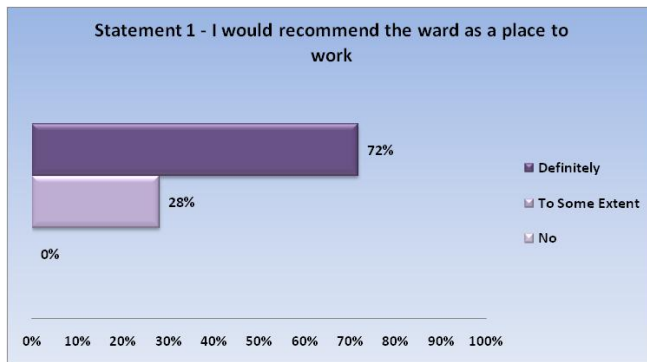

It must be emphasised that the number of patients surveyed is very small and may not necessarily be statistically representative.

In the areas where the harms occurred this is what the Nurses said about the care they have provided:

October's data shows a decrease in staff satisfaction and are slightly less satisfied with the quality of care they have been able to provide.

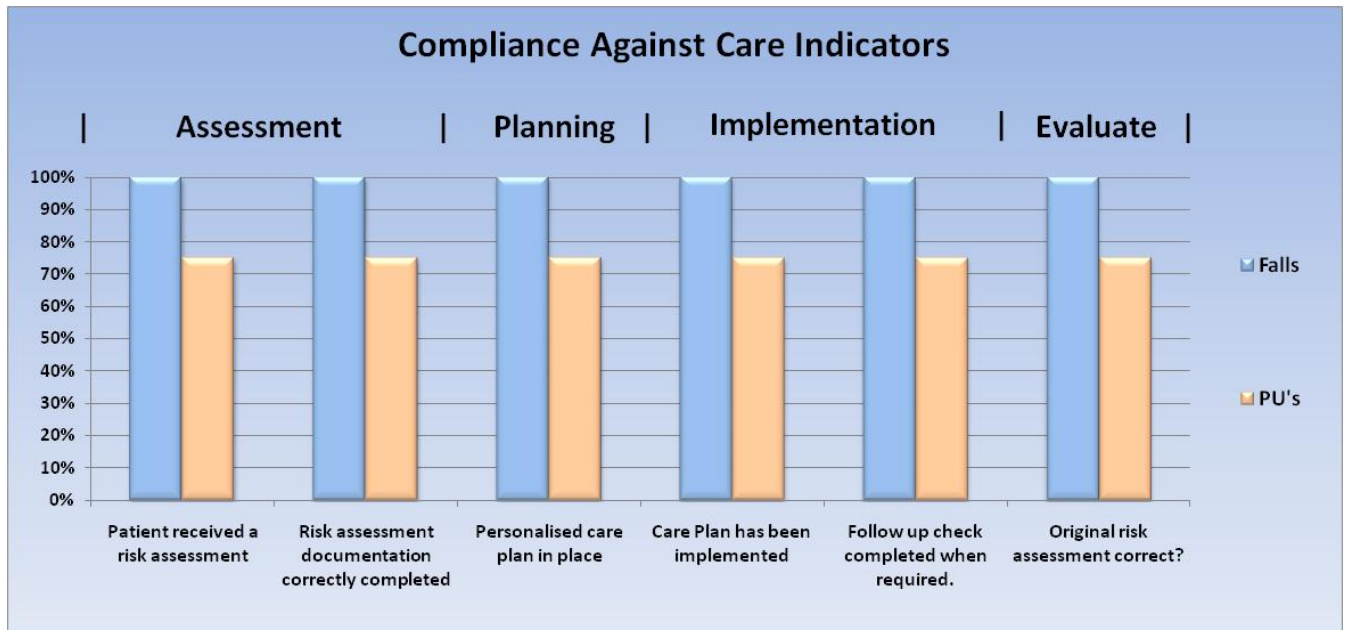

This may be as a result of some of the current uncertainty around proposed cost saving measures.

What did we learn about the care we have provided to patients?

Overall, there has been an improvement in the Nursing Care Indicators for falls which resulted in harm.

We have maintained improvements in the Nursing Care Indicators for the patients who suffered harm as a result of a pressure ulcer.

You said - We did!

From our continued analysis of our monthly '100 Voices' patient satisfaction surveys, we are reviewing the written information that is available for patients explaining our arrangements for mixed sex accommodation on our wards.
